The 11 most significant milestones and records at the 2010 FIFA World Cup™ (maybe!)

750 up

One milestone that will definitely be reached at the 2010 World Cup is the 750th match in the competition's history – Paraguay v. New Zealand in Polokwane on 24 June. Previous milestones have included AUT v. URU 1954 (100th match), FRG v. GDR 1974 (250th) and ARG v. BUL in 1994 (500th).

1

Goal no. 2,100 on 16 June?

Four years on from the 2,000th goal, scored by Sweden's Allbäck against England, we are getting closer to the next ton with only 37 goals needed to reach 2,100. If the goal ratio from the last two tournaments is anything to go by, the target could be reached on 16 June, the date of matches 15, 16 and 17. By the same logic, goal no. 2,200 will be scored towards the end of the tournament.

The 200th penalty...

...is a cert. We are currently on 190, and statistically speaking there is a penalty in every fourth game. Mexico's Rosas converted the first penalty against Argentina in 1930, and Brazil's Careca scored the 100th against Poland in 1986. The goalkeepers, meanwhile, will be looking to reach 25, as to date they have saved 21 spot kicks.

Record-breaking refs

Benito Archundia (MEX) already has one record under his belt, as in 2006 he became the first-ever referee to take charge of five matches in the same tournament (an honour that he later had to share with final referee Horacio Elizondo, who has since retired), but he now has a second all-time high in his sights, namely the record currently held by Joël Quiniou (FRA), who refereed a total of eight World Cup matches between 1986 and 1994.

4

Franco-German goal celebrations?

It would be fair to say that there is a good chance of at least one former world champion celebrating a historic goal landmark: Germany are closing in on their 200th goal (190 so far), whereas France are going for goal number 100 (95). Will they both be celebrating in a possible quarter-final encounter in early July?

100 no, 50 yes?

None of the seven world champions will be celebrating a major match milestone in South Africa. Even if they were to reach the final, Brazil would only be on 99 games (as would Germany) so the Seleção will probably have to wait for the 2014 tournament on home soil to reach their century. Spain's first game in 2010 will be their 50th World Cup match – a milestone that incidentally also lies within striking distance of Mexico (45). Cameroon (17) will become the first African team to rack up 20 World Cup appearances.

Parreira times six

There is no doubt about this particular record: Carlos Alberto Parreira will become the first coach to appear in six World Cups. He will be in charge of his fifth team – he first coached Kuwait in 1982 – and Bafana Bafana and their loyal fans will be hoping that he draws level with the current record-holder, Helmut Schön (25 matches), because if he does, that will mean that South Africa are in the quarter-finals...

The lesser-spotted hat-trick

There have been 47 hat-tricks so far in the World Cup but it is unlikely that we will see number 50 in South Africa. There were no hat-tricks at all in 2006, and the last World Cup to have more than two hat-tricks was 1986. Fewer and fewer players are following in the footsteps of Batistuta, Gerd Müller, Fontaine and Kocsis, who all have two World Cup hat-tricks to their name.

8

Going on 72? OK, time for a World Cup debut

Otto Rehhagel has been with Greece for nearly ten years, but he is showing no signs of slowing down. The German coach will turn 72 in August, so he will easily beat the current record, held by Cesare Maldini (who was nearly 70 when he coached Paraguay at the 2002 World Cup).

Klose closer to the top?

The top three leading goalscorers in World Cup history – Gerd Müller (14), Just Fontaine (13) and Pelé (12) – remained unchanged for nearly thirty years but then came Ronaldo to set a new mark with 15 goals between 1998 and 2006. Only one man can hope to create a new World Cup order any time soon: Germany's Miroslav Klose, who currently stands on 10.

Honour for Soccer City?

All eyes will be on the scoreboard for the announcement of the official attendance at the opening match and the final. Either way, Soccer City will be joining an illustrious list as to date only the Maracanã, the Azteca, Wembley, Camp Nou, the Bernabéu and Los Angeles' Rose Bowl have held more than 90,000 fans.

A total of 51 World Cup finals matches have gone to extra time. Details of the other 20 games can be found on the following page.

*Golden Goal: The team to score the first goal (Golden Goal) during the period of extra time was declared the winner. The Golden Goal rule (also known as "sudden death") was applied to all the FIFA tournaments from the 1993 World Youth Championship until the World Youth Championship 2004.

Penalty shoot-outs

The first ever match in a World Cup final competition to be decided on penalties was a semi-final showdown between Germany FR and France in 1982.

Timeless classics and those still waiting to be seen

The most recurring and rare head-to-heads in the history of the FIFA World Cup™

Football fans contemplating the most memorable matches played in the 80 year history of the FIFA World Cup™ would surely include matches involving the seven World Cup-winning associations. Statistics present a similar picture. Of the 708 World Cup finals played to date there are a number of recurring matches often featuring the same team pairings.

Heading the list is a fixture that would feature on any list of classic World Cup encounters: Brazil versus Sweden. This pair have met before seven times, the last time being the semi-final in Los Angeles in 1994. Two of the matches between Brazil and Sweden included legendary Brazilian players, Vava, Zagallo. The 1958 game also featured Pelé, then just 17 years old, who went on to be a major factor in the first of Brazil's five titles to date. Twenty years previous to this, two goals by the legendary Leonidas helped Brazil overturn a 2-0 deficit and claim victory in the match for third place.

Of the six matches played between Germany and Yugoslavia none have taken place in the latter stages of a World Cup final competition. In contrast the following four pairings have produced a total of six finals and three semi-finals. Brazil have played Italy twice in World Cup finals. Argentina and Germany have also competed against each other twice in a finals match. Italy have been in the final with winning associations, Germany and France, the most recent game being the one against Germany in 2006.

The list of head to heads between the seven world champions was only completed in 2002 when Germany met Brazil for the first time in the 2002 final. Nevertheless, there are still a number of matches between international football powerhouses that have not yet been played. For example, neither Brazil nor England have ever come up against Korea Republic, historically the most successful Asian team. France, Spain and Russia have also never been paired with the Netherlands. A number of southern European teams have also not played each other, for example Italy and Portugal. Italy have also not played Serbia. In the meantime, the USA have yet to challenge many of the leading European teams.

Groups of Death

The most difficult groups of the last 50 years

Teams that qualified for the next stage in bold

2010 > Group G

Brazil, Portugal, Côte d'Ivoire, Korea DPR

2006 > Group C

Argentina, Côte d'Ivoire, Netherlands, Serbia & Montenegro

Newcomers Côte d'Ivoire put up a tremendous showing in a group that includes two pre-tournament favourites. The Elephants finish ahead of Serbia & Montenegro, who finish pointless after the shock of losing heavily to Argentina in their opening match.

2002 > Group F

Argentina, England, Nigeria, Sweden

A seeded team also falls at the first hurdle in Korea/Japan, as Argentina fail to overcome last-placed Nigeria. England manager Sven-Göran Eriksson faces his native Sweden and both teams ultimately qualify for the next stage.

1998 > Group D

Bulgaria, Nigeria, Paraguay, Spain

Seeds Spain pay a heavy price for their defeat to Nigeria in their opening match. After managing no more than a draw against Paraguay, the Iberians are forced to pack their bags.

1994 > Group D

Italy, Mexico, Norway, Republic of Ireland

This is the last World Cup with 24 participants and also the last time that three European teams meet in the same group. The group finishes with all four teams on four points and equal goal difference. Mexico progress as group winners with three goals, while Norway go home after notching only one goal.

1990 > Group B

Argentina, Cameroon, Romania, Soviet Union

The biggest shock in an opening match in the 60-year history of the World Cup: world champions Argentina are humbled by Cameroon, but recover in the matches that follow. Cameroon also beat Romania, and the Soviet Union are knocked out in their last World Cup before their nation is disbanded.

1990 > Group F

Egypt, England, Netherlands, Republic of Ireland

Only one win in six matches (England's 1-0 victory over Egypt) separates the four sides in this tightly balanced group. FIFA decides the final placings of the Netherlands and Ireland by drawing lots – the one and only time that this last resort has been necessary.

1978 > Group 1

Argentina, France, Hungary, Italy

In the strongest group of the 1978 World Cup, France, starring young Michel Platini, only manage to beat Hungary and lose to the hosts and Italy. Roberto Bettega's goal gives the Azzurri victory over eventual winners Argentina.

1970 > Group 3

Brazil, Czechoslovakia, England, Romania

In a group in which Brazil win all of their matches and Czechoslovakia none, world champions England's 1-0 victory over Romania in their opening match proves to be decisive. The match between Brazil and England is regarded as the final that never was and will live long in the memory thanks to a miraculous save by Gordon Banks from a header by Pelé.

1966 > Group 2

Argentina, Germany FR, Spain, Switzerland

European champions Spain find themselves in a group with Argentina and eventual finalists Germany FR and lose 2-1 to both. The Swiss, who have an excellent World Cup pedigree, lose all of their matches and it takes them almost 30 years to qualify for another final competition.

1958 > Group 4

Austria, Brazil, England, Soviet Union

Pelé's first appearance at a FIFA World Cup™ is not blessed with an easy draw. The Soviet Union, starring Lev Yashin, lose to Brazil, for whom Vava scores twice. England achieve a draw against the Seleçao, but let a point go a-begging against Austria. The Soviet Union come out on top in the deciding match.

Africa and the FIFA World Cup™

Abdel Fawzi's legacy – African milestones in FIFA World Cup™ history

Nowadays, when we reflect on the greatest moments in Africa's World Cup history, our thoughts naturally turn to the tournaments of the last 30 years. We remember Ghana's remarkable victories against the Czech Republic and the USA on their World Cup debut in 2006, as well as the fantastic showing by the Ivorians, led by Didier Drogba, in the "group of death". We can recall the shock of Senegal overcoming reigning world champions France in the tournament's opening match in 2002, the wonderful performance by the Nigerian Super Eagles in 1998, including their defeat of Spain and their group victory, as well as their triumph against Argentina and unfortunate elimination against Italy at the quarter-final stage in 1994. Going back even further, we can conjure up images of Cameroon's heroics when they defeated world champions Argentina in Milan in 1990 before progressing to the quarter-finals, not least thanks to the legendary Roger Milla, who broke various FIFA records and who also evokes memories of 1982, when the Indomitable Lions first qualified for a World Cup and remained undefeated, only being knocked out on a goal difference of one by eventual winners Italy.

Such is the power of colour television, however, that despite African teams' many feats of glory – which also include Algeria's victory over Germany FR in 1982 – we forget that Africa was represented as far back as the second World Cup in 1934 and indeed celebrated its first two goals during this tournament, courtesy of a certain Egyptian player named Abdel Fawzi. Thereafter, all was quiet on the African front for many years. Apart from two play-off matches between Egypt and Italy in 1953-54, it was to be another 25 years before African teams would take part in a preliminary competition – and in some cases they were immediately eliminated before even playing a match.

There is often a time lapse before sociopolitical events are reflected in football, but the wave of decolonisation that took place during the 1960s rightly led to the first intra-African qualification tournament – won by Morocco – for the 1970 World Cup. The Atlas Lions went on to claim the first ever point by an African team in a final competition when they drew against Bulgaria in León on 11 June 1970, only days after seeing a similarly impressive result snatched from their grasp against overwhelming favourites Germany FR. Tunisia would manage to grab a share of the spoils against Germany FR in 1978, and indeed only just missed out on qualification from their group after also clinching victory against Mexico, but it was the increase in participating teams for the 1982 World Cup that really boosted the African teams' chances – and they took full advantage. In 1986, Morocco became the first African team to qualify for the second round, the Round of 16, in which they were edged out 1-0 by Germany FR. The baton of history was then passed on to Africa's most recent heroes.
